

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

The change to regulations currently being considered to prevent independent ISP's from deploying DSL would seem to be not in the best interest of the public.

The services provided by independent ISP's accomplish a wide and varied amount of functions that are not necessarily available through the large telephone and cable companies.

In times when expansion of business and trade is front and center to help re-establish our economic growth, it seems quite counter-productive to restrict markets in favor of the large corporations. The core of this country's economy is the small to medium sized business and restraint of trade by increasing regulation is not in our best interest.

Sincerely,

Len Landelius
